The objer it is and the more polish it has had the more pleasing it is to the eye of the notable housekeeper.

In the south in auto-bollom days there was a good deal of old mahogany that had come down in families, some of it imported from the old home beyoud the sea, and it was kept in per feet condition by the darly rubbing of the house servants. The air of stabili ty, comfort and leisure in those levely southern homes was in entire contrast with that of a cluttered modern drawing room, where there is a chaotic medley of all sorts of articles, some of one period, some of another, many of them purchased without the least view to the general effect. It must be mournfully admitted that the taste of the average householder is a little doubtful, or else that the ideal of sleeve puffs are tucked to give the apsimplicity and utility.

Mortifying. Mortifyling.

There are a few solvent and respectable persons left in the country who have not yet been investigated. It begins to be citibiarinssing to a high soul rot to have been found out. We are all miserable sinners. The prayer book says so. To have from a third to a half of our friends caught in some of their sins while ours continue private is confusive to softeon tempt. It would be fairer to serve us out one suit of sackeloth space and ring in a general confession.—Lafe.
